The developer said that the new system was created to create "natural and believable" gameplay that adapts to the player, and the game also introduces real-time player positioning and orientation with pitch and goal lighting. The players' movements are highly realistic, with them running through their own markers. The developers claim that the in-game motion capture technology can accurately recreate what the player is doing while they are playing on the field. Players' animations during both low-intensity and high-intensity attacks are highly realistic. Players sprint or change direction based on the movement of their feet and they can adjust the intensity of their movements to suit the situation. HyperMotion is applied to all the defensive, attacking, and in-between players. It features signature moves including a wall screen, backwards-wall throw, spinning, one-handed dives, and feints. The system is included in every football match in FIFA 22. Players are marked in different colors to indicate their position on the pitch, and different appearances are applied to players based on their positions and what they are doing. For example, players from the sides of the pitch will have a different appearance, and the color of the shirt worn by the goalkeeper will change depending on what he is doing. FIFA 22 also introduces a new post-match review system, which also allows the referee to review and decide on the outcome of a match. The game has also introduced new slide tackles. HyperMotion also allows players to sprint back and forth between the lines of the pitch. As it applies to both players and defenders, this means that no player can be out of position. The new system has also been applied to FIFA, allowing players to perform wall throws and wall dribbles. FIFA 22 also features a newly-designed gamepad interface. World-class HyperMotion Technology powers FIFA 22. Players can run back and forth between the lines. Slide tackles have been reworked and a new post-match review system is included. All other football video games are still played in 2D, while FIFA 22 is available in a new 3D mode. FIFA 22 features better pitch lighting and includes all the new player abilities added to previous FIFA titles. The game was unveiled at the EA Play event that took place during the Electronic
