“The new version of FIFA and my new role as Technical Director has been an amazing opportunity for me,” said Alex Ferguson. “To have FIFA officially recognized for its unique brand as a sports title, and at the same time to have already represented it in almost every global territory speaks volumes about how important FIFA is around the world. FIFA has always been a pioneer, but this time we’re even more the leading flag-bearer for the sport, as more and more players play on top of our game. Our fans will enjoy the most exciting FIFA ever.” “FIFA is recognized as a modern, well-balanced title and is regarded by players around the world as the best football simulation available,” said Jeff Miller, Chief Marketing Officer of Electronic Arts. “We know that FIFA fans are excited to see the new features and improvements this year. We’re happy to announce we’re launching with the most comprehensive set of content and features we’ve ever put in a game. This is a great time to be a FIFA fan!” “Our development team has been hard at work to deliver a FIFA game that fans of all levels will enjoy,” said Ian Livingstone, Creative Director at EA Canada. “With real-world players, full-motion captures and hyper-realistic stadiums, we’re creating the perfect playground for soccer fans who want to play like the pros.” In addition to the release of FIFA 22, the game will be available in early access from today for PlayStation 4, Xbox One, and Origin.
