2006 director:Â . One of the Wii U's defining features is its use of a tablet-style controller called the GamePad. It has separate sensor bar, making it possible to play with only one hand. Its multi-touch screen also offers new control methods over game and menu screens. The game Pad also features an infrared emitter/receiver that can use it as a remote control for the TV. Games use the gamepad's built-in gyroscope to determine the user's rotation, which can be used to control certain motion effects and play shooters. The Wii U's GamePad has a digitizer in the lower right corner that can be used to make stylus drawings, take notes, and create layouts for art or game art. The Wii U also has built-in NFC (near-field communication), allowing for game-based auctions and game purchases. The Wii U does not support the NFC on any game cards, however. Not all games support the GamePad; eShop games that were designed before the console's release will still. Online mode offers up to six players over the internet and up to four players for local play. Wii U online modes include Just Dance 4 Wii U, Splatoon 2, Mario Kart 8 Deluxe, Pokken Tournament DX, and Super Smash Bros. Online Play and Communication Use of the Wii U GamePad as the controller. While playing a game, touch the GamePad screen to draw, write, or take notes on a screen on your TV. The Wii U is backward compatible with games for both the Wii and Wii. This includes New Super Mario Bros. U, Super Paper Mario, Mario Kart 8, Pikmin 3, and Fire Emblem. All games have their Wii U (and Wii U GamePad). When hooked to a TV, the Wii U GamePad has a screen that displays video from the games on the TV screen. The Wii U GamePad also displays the TV screen with the Wii U games. This mode is called TV Mode. Game pad screen can display games and menus from the Wii U without the TV screen. This mode is called TV Mode. Game pad screen can display a split screen of two Wii U games. This mode is called GamePad Mode. Allows Gamepad screen to display an over-the-top video feed from the GamePad screen on a separate TV screen. This mode is called Overlay Mode. Online mode offers up to six players over the internet and up to four players for local e79caf774b
