Our results were consistent with these studies in terms of the relationship between perceived community resources and ethnicity. Key results showed that older age was a predictor of increased perception of community resources in migrant patients, but we did not find the same relationship in the NHSE group [18, 19]. We explained the reason for this by the difference of characteristics between our study sample and the samples in previous studies. In previous studies, sampling strategies were only used in patients from a single hospital. In addition, although previous studies did not clearly distinguish between NHSE patients and migrant patients, they included the two groups. Thus, we believe that hospital convenience sampling was the main reason for these conflicting results. It is necessary to consider this relationship when attempting to explain the cause of community resources. We suggest a need for further research to confirm the association between these two factors. In previous studies, it has been reported that the socioeconomic
