Dapiprazole, a novel benzimidazole potassium channel opener, and its combined use with polyethylene glycol electrolyte solution for treating electrolyte-related disorders in renal failure patients: a prospective, randomized, double-blind, and crossover trial. Acute or chronic hyperkalemia can cause life-threatening arrhythmias, particularly in patients with renal failure. A new potassium-channel opener, dapiprazole, may be useful in treating hyperkalemia and for electrolyte-related disorders, and it is expected to be more potent than cyclopiazonic acid. We evaluated the efficacy of dapiprazole (0.1-1 mg) or dapiprazole (0.1-1 mg) + polyethylene glycol electrolyte solution (PEG 3350; 1-5 g/kg) for hyperkalemia in patients with renal failure, and its effects on intracellular ion concentration. Fifty-four hyperkalemic patients were randomly assigned to receive dapiprazole ($n = 21$, 1 mg) or dapiprazole ($n = 26$, 0.5 mg)+PEG ($n = 4$, 1 g/kg) for 3 h after an oral loading dose of 1 mg. Six patients were excluded because of incomplete data. Thus, 48 patients (31 men and 17 women with a mean age of 51 years; serum creatinine level, 6.16 ± 1.52 mg/dL) were included in the safety analysis, and 45 patients (29 men and 16 women; mean age, 55.2 years; serum creatinine level, 6.41 ± 1.79 mg/dL) in the efficacy analysis. In the efficacy analysis, blood pressure, heart rate, and the plasma potassium level decreased significantly at all time points after dapiprazole. Plasma concentrations of potassium, magnesium, and calcium were decreased significantly by dapiprazole and dapiprazole+PEG. In the safety analysis, blood pressure decreased significantly after dapiprazole and dapiprazole+PEG administration. Three patients reported mild adverse events (transient pruritus and/or mild dizziness). Dapiprazole is a potent potassium-channel opener that is expected to be useful for treating hyperkalemia and electrolyte-related disorders in patients with renal failure.

group has had a team full of “overrated” players. Some of the best players in the NBA have come from this group. The challenge for players in this group is to prove themselves year after year in New York, and they have. Cory Booker in 6th Booker was a virtual sure thing the second the Knicks made it clear that they would trade Griffin and develop his game with the hope he would be the successor to Amar'e Stoudemire. Booker gives the Knicks some future upside as a three-and-D guy who can score from midrange at the next level and will be a threat when given the ball. Booker hasn't quite lived up to expectations, averaging only 10.1 points per game. However, he averages almost seven rebounds and 2.6 assists. Booker has had an uneven season, but will benefit greatly if his confidence in his abilities is returning, which will be a benefit to the team if the Knicks are going to make a playoff run. Gerald Henderson in 7th Henderson was the third of the three guys chosen to go #4, and the Knicks wanted him. The Knicks knew that he was limited when they first drafted him, but his defense was good and his passing was an important element in playing with the Big East. Henderson has never been much of a scorer, but he is a solid shooter. The Knicks liked him so much, that they signed him to a contract extension before the 2011 season. He has a contract worth $9 million for three more seasons. The Knicks will be hoping he can develop into a scoring point guard, but his outside shooting has been poor, and the Knicks are hoping that he will rediscover his jumper. A knee injury last season hurt his effectiveness, but he still managed to play at a high level, averaging 10.7 points, 4.5 rebounds and 1.9 assists per game. Serge Ibaka in 9th Serge was a candidate for the Knicks as a free agent, as he had received a qualifying offer from the Wizards. Unfortunately, the offer they sent wasn't worth his request, and he ended up signing a three-year, $27 million deal with the Thunder, where he was expected to be one of the top perimeter players. He has been a shooting guard in Oklahoma City, and has been a high scoring guard. The Knicks feel that he has tremendous potential, and are hoping he can do more offensively than he
