California has been hit with a new record-breaking drought. The state's water agency announced on Friday that the drought declared in January is now the worst on record for the entire state. The drought officially began July 1, but did not officially end until just a couple weeks ago. In fact, the dry conditions have been ongoing for several months. The historic drought comes after California experienced its driest year ever in 2012. Last year, 10.1% of the state was suffering with extreme drought. This year, that number is now at 22.5%. Gov. Jerry Brown has declared a drought state of emergency to bring together resources for fighting the drought. The drought was expected to last until November, but dry conditions are expected to continue through the fall. "This drought is going to continue and the impacts will continue and we need to be prepared and that's what we've done," said Rick Thoman, a climate and water specialist at the UC Davis Center for Watershed Sciences, in an interview with the Los Angeles Times. This is the driest year in California's recorded history, according to Thoman. "Not only are we seeing a longer drought, but it's going to be a drier year as well," said Thoman.
