After the Beast of Baja, ADT has responded by releasing the beast of the North West Mountainous Desert, ADT Security Services. Tallone, M., Blanchett, J., Lulley, J., Canis, P. & Lim, Y.K. (2007) Do spicules from moulting 'golden' weasels (Mustela

Italia) have the properties of neosilicone? A laboratory study of micro-containers containing golden weasel faeces. Zoo Biology, 26, pp. 355-364 (link) I do love the golden weasel. It has a mischievous character about it and its general lean, mean and furry, but more importantly I love this species is one of the few weasels in the world which is native to Australia. An interesting wrinkle of Australian weasel biology is the annual moulting of the golden weasel. When the weasels are molting, their back fur is a lot thicker and yellowish, and they have an elaborate system of secretions on the skin, which creates a sort of cone-like formation from the body. Last time I wrote about golden weasels, I thought the golden weasels' colouration was pretty spooky in its similarity to that of the AGW's, and some online discussions have indicated that the two species may be distantly related. I was pretty excited when I saw the bulldog
