I need to parse it in a InputStream. In the opposite direction I have a byte[] encoded in Base-64 (so I can pass it as InputStream). But I need a string, not an InputStream. I can use a byte[] to get the String, but I can't convert the String to a byte[] or vice-versa. A: If you have a byte[] in Base-64 notation (that can be converted to bytes) you can convert it to a string via Base64.getDecoder().decode(byte[]) If you have a string that is Base-64 encoded, simply create a byte[], as byte[], then convert it to a string using Base64.getEncoder().encodeToString(byte[]) make eye contact with him again and he seems to have aged, but he's still a very effective salesperson. He's also discovered a way to get rich by investing a few million of his disposable income and he's got a serious-looking trophy wife. It's not hard to see where the crimes in the story come from.

Like I said, we've got a new scenario here. He's the bride's father. He's not selling the bureaukakashi, but if he'd ever been in the market for one, he'd know all the suppliers and details, down to the smallest detail, for this model. He's also in the habit of showing off the fruits of his business to his wife and daughter. The bureauk
