Frederic Harris (1803–1871), was an English architect, active in Birmingham. He was born in 1803 in County Durham, the son of a stonemason. His father moved to Birmingham to work in the New Convent area of the city, where Harris completed his education. He worked in the office of Thomas Fuller, and became an associate of George Ashby of Birmingham. He was an early member of the Birmingham Architectural Association, and a long-serving president of the Birmingham Architectural Society. Harris was encouraged by Fuller and Ashby to take over the practice on the retirement of Edmund Sharpe, but this has been called a "misdirected ambition" which led to "a turbulent career". He rapidly became established as an architect in Birmingham, taking over the Principal's office from William Haywood. In 1839 he became a member of the Board of Trade, and also served as secretary to a committee to found the Birmingham Society of Arts. His work was small scale in comparison with that of his predecessors. He designed new buildings, and also remodelled or restored buildings in the city. His designs included: The corporation house, Old Birmingham Town Hall (1845–46) The Baptist church at St Philip's, Paulsley (1846) St Mary's parish church, Kings Norton (1852–55) The government loan office, Birmingham (1851) The Baptist church, Winson Green (1857–58) The principal building of the Birmingham and Midland Institute (1859–61) The Episcopal church of St Saviour, Edgbaston (1860). The council offices, Birmingham (1869–71) He also designed buildings away from Birmingham, including: The Baptist chapel, Beechwood, Leeds (1839) He was a proponent of the Gothic Revival style, designing a number of churches in that style. He died suddenly in Birmingham in 1871, leaving a widow and a large family.
