zip file when the release comes out? Thanks in advance. Re: Sysprep not installing Windows 8.1 Win7 Home Premium Here are the 3 main reasons why you are getting the error. Full: <https://pcsupport.about.com/od/repair/a/sysprep-error-code-0xc0000976.htm> domain name and password in the most famous application ever having to of them cfhowlett 31 I feel all should be aware of the compression mechanism if the.zip archive and no tool whatsoever should damage any of these three files. Is the loss of just the "3" or the "2" on the file-name important? No, not really, but I suggest you leave that one alone if you would rather not remove the "3." A few years ago when MS improved their deployment packaging procedures to use.zip files to package the install and upgrade media, it was a huge advantage to producers of copy protection devices. It didn't take long for crackers to figure out a way to crack the 3-digit password and decompress the.zip archive that contained the final installation/upgrade media. With the large number of copy protection on CDs and DVDs, producers needed a way to place special content and encryption on their copy-protected data. This required a certain amount of interaction on the part of the consumer. The consumer would not be able to modify the file as the password would be 3 digits. People would need to have a specific device or software tool to crack the password in order to access the media. This worked out really well. I am so glad that they changed their product. Now I can simply install Windows without worrying about the installation process. Is there a way to remove the "3" so that it will just install? Yes, but it requires that you have a backup of your master boot record, and a Recovery Disc. Windows is designed in a such a way that it will only attempt to reinstall the system from the master boot record (MBR). If you back up your MBR, and you have a recovery disc made from a previous installation, you can delete the "3" and just install the Windows. If you do not have a backup of your MBR, or if your Recovery Disc has only Windows 2000 or XP on it, you are in serious trouble. If you want to do this from scratch, you will need to restore the MBR from a backup of the original MBR that is saved on your hard drive (or another source of backup that is not in the format that the Windows 2000 or XP Recovery disc recognizes). I actually am not sure if Vista has been able to do this in a similar way since the versions of the MBR that it has been able to read in the past have not been compatible with each other. If you do get the MBR from a prior install, then just delete the "3" to take care of the error. I've had this happen before. Bad news is the 2000 and XP Recovery Discs do not work for Windows 8.0 because Windows 8 has a different MBR format. Upgrading from a 2000/XP disc is not recommended, and would most likely result in just restoring your backup. If you are booting with a Windows 7/8 disc, you will need to use the Windows 8.1/10 MBR instead of the 2000/XP Recovery Discs in order to install. As others have said, I would recommend performing a clean install of the 8.1 or 8.0 version that you intend to use rather than starting over with an 8.0 system.

i was bored and wanted a warm up, and came up with something that will be real useful when the next windows comes out. so i made a tool that will create a bootable usb for windows 10, 8, 7 and server 2012 r2. you can also use it to backup your computer and restore them on any computer with a usb port. minitool shadowmaker is also available on windows servers and workstation. as a reliable and free backup software for windows 10/8/7, it can automatically and periodically create full backups of your computer, which saves your time from reinstalling windows & application or data recovery after data loss. minitool shadowmaker is also available on windows servers and workstation. 4) finally, if you want to log the progress, you need to use the get-childitem and write-progress cmdlets. i originally didnt do it, but after reading up on it, i decided to log the file counts using the format-list cmdlet. this is the way to go. the progress is pretty self explanatory. you will want to only run this at the end, unless you want to see it while its happening, in which case you can run it every time the script is run. when you are restoring a system, you want it to be simple and fast. just can be a small system, or a big one, as long as you have not restored it before. this is the background of the windows system restore tool. on the one hand, it can make the process of restoring the system as simple and fast as possible, on the other hand, it can also help users to restore the system without loss, and make the system be like the original. 5ec8ef588b
