Cardiovascular disease is the leading cause of mortality in the United States. Its incidence, however, has increased faster than that of diabetes, obesity, and hypertension. This is in part due to the increasing number of patients at risk of or with established cardiovascular disease, but also due to patients with increasingly complicated forms of cardiovascular disease. Patients with acute cardiovascular disease, especially those with ST-elevation myocardial infarction (STEMI), are a particular challenge. Approximately 80% of patients with STEMI are referred to a cardiac catheterization laboratory within 1 hour after symptom onset. However, the mortality associated with STEMI has decreased by just 11%, and even this small improvement is attributable to the administration of thrombolytic therapy and angioplasty.[@bb0005] Furthermore, mortality from STEMI has been shown to be approximately twice that from non-STEMI.[@bb0010] In fact, STEMI is the most common
